Women's History Month: Remembering Georgianna Nottage

In recognition of March as "Women's History Month" the National Women's History Alliance has chosen the theme of "Moving Forward Together! Women Educating and Inspiring Generations." That certainly applies to Georgianna Lorraine Nottage, OD '46. Dr. Nottage not only accomplished her career goals but also paved the way for others as the first African American to graduate from the Pennsylvania State College of Optometry (PSCO). After graduating, Dr. Nottage became a licensed optometrist, and in 1947 established her own practice at 21st and Diamond streets in North Philadelphia. Read more

Orthotics & Prosthetics Extern Plays a Key Role in Life-Saving Incident

As an offensive lineman on his college football team, the main job of Logan Tonini '26O&P — all 6'4" and 290 pounds of him — was to protect his quarterback from harm. And, now as a student in the Orthotics and Prosthetics \(O&P\) program at Salus at Drexel University, Tonini is still helping to protect people. Recently, as Tonini was leaving his externship at Hanger Clinic in Portland, Maine, he encountered a panicked woman rushing into the clinic who was on the phone to 9-1-1 emergency personnel. That was where being the size of an offensive lineman may have been the difference between life and death. Read more
